Abolish War - A Joint US-Soviet Peace Campaign Can Do It
By ROBERT S. KAHN

I
THERE is a new US-Soviet Peace Campaign which aims to eliminate war throughout the world. The campaign is sponsored by the United States Committee to Abolish Nuclear Arms. It is a joint effort between the two nations to work toward the elimination of nuclear weapons and other forms of conflict.

The campaign is based on the belief that war is a destructive force that harms all countries. It is opposed to the use of force as a means to resolve disputes and advocates the use of peaceful methods to resolve conflicts. The campaign is also supported by a number of other organizations and individuals from both countries.

The campaign is currently working on several initiatives, including the development of a joint statement that will be signed by leaders from both nations. The statement will express the shared desire to eliminate war and the commitment to work towards this goal.

The campaign is also working to increase public awareness about the dangers of war and the benefits of peace. It is holding events and meetings to discuss the issues and encourage people to participate in the campaign.

The campaign is receiving support from various sources, including government officials, businessmen, and ordinary citizens. It is working to build a strong foundation for the campaign to achieve its goals.

The campaign is a positive step towards a safer world. It is an example of how countries can work together for the common good and create a better future for everyone.
